DUBLIN CASTLE, 8th June, 1798.

EARLY this Morning an Expreſs was received from Major-General Johnſton, dated at New Roſs, the 5th Inſtant: By this it appears that about ſix on that Morning, the REBELS attacked his Poſition at New Roſs with a very large Force, and great Impetuoſity, but that after a Conteſt of ſeveral Hours they were completely repulſed. The Loſs of the REBELS was very great, the Streets being literally ſtrewed with their Carcaſſes. An Iron Gun, upon a Ship Carriage, was taken, and late in the Evening they retreated entirely to Carrickbyrne, leaving ſeveral Iron Ship Guns, not mounted.

General Johnſton ſtates that too much Praiſe cannot be given to the Forces under his Command; and that to Major General Euſtace, and indeed to every Individual, he was in the higheſt Degree indebted for their ſpirited Exertions.

The General ſeverely regrets the Loſs of that brave Officer, Lord Mountjoy, who fell early in the Conteſt. A Return of the killed and wounded of his Majeſty's Forces has not been received, but it appears not to have been conſiderable.

PARTICULARS RELATIVE TO THE COUNTY OF WICKLOW,

Extracted from a Letter of MAJOR HARDY to LORD CASTLEREAGH, dated Wicklow, 4th June.

" The Troops in this County have behaved uncommonly well, eſpecially the " Yeoman of this Town. The Shillelagh Troops alſo acquitted themſelves no- " bly in beating back the Wexford Rebels. Our Yeomen have been now ſixteen " Days on hard Duty, and the laſt ten Nights conſtantly up; their Hours of Reſt " from three or four in the Morning to ten or eleven. The REBELS are nu- " merous in our Woods and Mountains, but from the great Exertions made " to get up the Arms before the Rebellion broke out, and the unremitting Aſſi- " duity exerted ſince to prevent any falling into their Hands, they have been " prevented from acting with the ſame Effect as their Aſſociates in Wexford. " There have been five Engagements at different Times in this County, and I " do believe we have killed above ſeven hundred REBELS."
